In this seminar we will explore gendered violence & movements to end gendered violence, such as #metoo. Both gender & violence will be thought of as systems, with violence contributing to the policing & reproduction of gender & gender norms. We will consider how gendered violence unfolds in relation to racialization, class & sexuality, including how some are disproportionately exposed to violence, & how systems of sexism, racism, classism & heteropatriarchy work to make gendered violence less visible. We will also research movements working to interrupt this violence, thinking both about what keeps gendered violence in place & what we can do to end gendered violence.
