This course will engage with transnational feminisms to trace and ask questions of global capitalism, gendered and racialized forms of labor exploitation, and practices of anti-racist, feminist solidarity. In addition to familiarizing students with key works in transnational feminist theory, the course will foreground two areas of inquiry. First, we will look at gendered labor exploitation in global context, between and across the boundaries of nation-states. Second, we will consider anti-trafficking as a framing and narrative, asking how it may collude with gendered and racialized forms of anti-migration politics.

WINTER 2021

PROFESSOR

LEILA WHITLEY

TuTh | 3:30-4:50PM | Remote Course
cgs.ucsd.edu